They formed near the Main Exposition Building, and armed with their wands marched down to the place of exhibition. They march with great precision, and in their gray uniforms, with bright belts and badges of varied hues, make a pictureague sight. Their appearance as they came forward into place facing the grand stand and opened out their ranks so as to give room fer the movements, was the signal for salves of applause.

The Opera House was crowded last ingist as it is very seldom, the occasion being the concert, at which the singing sections of the various Turnvereins contested for prizes, and young men from the different societies declaimed. The committee appointed to award the prizes was composed of H. C. Bloedel, Carl Z.pp, H. Ballin, Max Gescheidter and G. Pfisterer. Each sat by himself and G. Pfisterer. Each sat by himself and made notes. These will be compared, and the result thus arrived at.

The prize singing was opened by the Robert Blum Maennerchor, the singing section of the Allegheny Central Turnverein, which was followed by the Singing section of the Central Verein of Pittsburgh. Three other societies also contested in this class, and in the second class there were about as many. All sang in such form as to cause voriferous applause and hearty encores, and the concert did not end until nearly mid-night. The programme was made up of choice numbers and was as follows:

August, a ten-year-old son of William Gréwe, the well-known baker of No. 2153 Main street, was horribly killed by being kicked by a horse which he had led to water. The horse, which has been owned by Mr. Grewe a long time, was supposed to be as gentle as a lamb and was frequently entrusted to the care of the boy, hie had led the horse from the stable to the fountain at the Fifth ward Market House, to water, and was leading him home to the stable. When near the stable the horse turned suddenly and pulling the haiter out of the boy's band started in the other direction. The boy's started after the horse, and when just in range, the animal let fly both hind feet, striking him fairly on the side of the hone and died in fifteen mining and the still bear of the bear and died in fifteen mining utes. Dr. J. H. Pipes was called, but medical skill could do nothing for the boy.
